TOPS IN FEED

One day in 1922, Gen. Allen, a San Francisco-born Colleen, played hooky from a New York secondary school to pay a backstage visit at a vaudeville house. There she met George D. Brown, the starting point of a personal partnership that is the backbone of the comedy duo on the radio, stage and screen. And the beginning of a romance that has no parallel in fiction or real life. This funny comedy duo, known as "The Allen Brown Show," has been on the air for 15 years.

Give Rule for Keeping

Leftovers Nourishing

"Cold and covered" is the rule for keeping most leftovers attractive and nourishing. And another slogan about storage might be, "Make it snappy." Use leftover foods as soon as possible—if they stand around a long time, they won't taste good or look good—and remember, air is a robber of vitamins.

If leftovers are "congenial," store them together. For example, potatoes, peas and carrots can all go into the same little jar or covered dish. Keep two jars for juice in the refrigerator; one for fruit juices, and one for the soups and stews. Vegetables, fruit juices can go into a chilled fruit drink or into a gelatin salad. Vegetable liquors can give flavor and vitamins to soups, cream sauce or vegetable juice drinks.

Potatoes are one of the most adaptable leftovers. They keep well, too, especially if you cook them in the jackets. Leftover potatoes fit into a hot soup, stew or salad. They are good hash-browned, creamed, or browned whole with a touch of onion. Mashed potatoes don't keep quite so well as boiled ones, so use them within two or three days. They make a fine lining or topping for a vegetable or meat pie, or add an egg and bit of milk for a baked potato puff.

Heating Will Kill

Fatal Pork Parasite

Studies by the bureau of animal industry of the United States department of agriculture have shown several methods of destroying the minute parasite causing the painful and sometimes fatal disease, trichinosis. This parasite is sometimes present in raw or imperfectly cooked pork, and endangers the health of persons eating it. Outbreaks have been caused by eating home-made salami, which is a particularly dangerous food, as usually prepared, for several reasons.

It is commonly believed that old, lean hogs make the best salami, and these are more apt to carry the parasites than young hogs. Most home-made salami is cooked little, if at all, and is not usually stored at very low temperatures. The situation is made worse by the fact that eating the material is usually started soon after it is finished.

Salami from packing houses under official inspection is a safe food, the necessary precautions having been taken in its preparation. Heating pork so that all portions of it attain a temperature of 157 degrees or more, USDA scientists found, will kill the trichina parasite; likewise, pork refrigerated at 5 degrees for at least 30 days is safe.

Rabbit repellents include aluminum sulphate spray composed of two table-spoonsful of aluminum sulphate and one tablespoonful of soap or some other spreader dissolved in a gallon of water, to be applied as a fine spray to vegetation frequently to keep materials in suspension. Be sure upper surfaces of leaves are thoroughly covered. Before harvesting, use foliage for food, wash off spray residue.

Another repellent is of powdered alum-tobacco dust made up of powdered alum, two ounces; fine tobacco dust, one pound. Mix thoroughly and apply as a dust to the plants, or with a homemade duster fashioned of a cloth bag. Special attention should be given to the upper surfaces of the leaves. Continuous applications must be made for protection. Applications should be made every five to seven days. New application should be made after each rain.
